Is there a substitute for glass in a greenhouse?

There is no long term substitute for glass in a greenhouse imho. Its not a "great" insulator. Glass with Bubble-wrap is a better insulator than standard twin wall Polycarb, but you can then take the bubble wrap down in the Spring and get the benefit of the extra light transmission that glass has, compared to Polycarb.

Should you replace damaged or outdated greenhouse glass?

Replacing damaged or outdated greenhouse glass is crucial for several reasons: Restore Light Transmission: Cracked or dirty glass reduces the amount of light reaching your plants. Improve Safety: Damaged glass poses a safety hazard to people and plants.

Why should you install glass panels in a greenhouse?

Enhance Insulation: Properly installed glass helps regulate temperature and reduces energy costs. Maintain Aesthetics: Fresh glass panels give your greenhouse a clean and well-maintained appearance. Are you starting an allotment or planning on growing your own fruit, vegetables, herbs, and flowers in a kitchen garden?
